There's a Democratic proposition for 1908 that will bear looking into. The first half of it comes from Mr. Lawson, who is just back to Boston after a devastating tour of the West, in the course of which he took some frightful falls out the "system," and effected arrangements to have Kansas sell all its stocks and bonds to John D.

All Right in Minnesota.

Mr. Lawson announces that he is for cratic nomination for President. There's no denying that the Boston man has picked a good runner. If Johnson could he would beat anybody yet proposed.

Governor Johnson last fall carried for governor, on the Democratic ticket, a plurality. The performances of Doug-las in Massachusetts, and Burge in Nebraska were tame in comparison The governor of Minnesota is Swede, had a good record as a State senator, and represented the popular cause as against Bob Dunn, machine Republican candidate and alleged protege of the Northern Securities interests.

Think of it—eight thousand Kansans in an open grove, with nothing to shelter them but a great tin reof o. posts, staying through four hours and twenty minutes of talk on the heretofore dry subject of finance from an unknown private citizen, unused to public speaking, a frightful gale blow-ing, rain pouring in torrents, and thunder and lightning deafening and paralyz-ing, and at the end of that long address shake hands and tell what they thought of my work.

The body of William F. Hubbard, assistant, Forest Service of the Depart ment of Agriculture, who lived at 1122 Sixteenth street northwest, has been in the Potomac river more than twenty four hours. Authorities of Maryland who have been dragging for it, reported that it had not been struck or caught by the grappling irons.

Hubbard had spent much incoments on the water, and was not frightened by being thrown into the water. He shouted to Ayres, to cling on to one side of the boat while he held on to the other, and said they would soon have the boat setting right in the water.

Mr. Hubbard, who weighs about 180 pounds, is believed to have been too heavy to balance his companion. He went down shortly after catching hold of the boat. The water rushed into his mouth, and either excited or strangled him so that he could not save himself. He was drowned without coming to the surface the customary three times.

Mr. Ayres held on like grim death to his end of the boat, and was carried for the office.

Mr. Summers replied, saying the time had now come for the Republicans of Alexandria to take charge of the city government. He warned the Democrats that they must be careful of their actions or the town would go Republican. Mr. Summers referred in complimentary terms to Chairman Siemp. Speaking of the contest for governor, he declared Judge L. L. Lewis, the Republican nominee, the best equipped man for the office.

J. Barry Adams, of Gaithersburg, Md., and F. E. Olmstead, of Washington, both employes of the Forest Service and friends of Mr. Hubbard.

The friends went to the scene of the drowning and assisted in the search for the body. At nightfall they returned to the city, leaving Dick Walker, a river-

Mr. Ayres says he thinks he saw Mr. Hubbard rise to the surface and make several strokes toward the shore, but could not be positive of this. Even if Mr. Hubbard did do this it is not believed he could have saved himself, because of the treacherous eddles and whirlpools which abound at that point in the river.
